WILL BE CONTINUED ON SATURDAY, JUNE 9. Napoleon like a thunderbolt to disturb the brief triumph of Ab-solutism are most graphically portrayed. The routine-life of solutism are most graphically portrayed. The realistic solution in French peasantry; the life of the humble soldier in the field; also where he is rarely described—in the hospital—are faithfully narrated in the masterly manner for which the author is so celebrated. The whole book systains and teaches a morality which will go far to remove the wholesale imputations summittees cast on French novels and their morality. Since deficielle and Chatesphriand's remances, nothing superior has Saintine and Chatesubriand's romances, nothing superior has been written in the French language.

This is one of the most successful, as it is one of the most beautiful and tascinating volumes ever leaned from the American Frees. Its plottures of rural seems stand out so minutely truthful and life-like before the mind, that they possess all the charm of a printer's most successful efforts, while the initiatisable sketches of character and events display in observation that allows nothing to escape unnoticed, however minute, and carry the reader back, with an almost magical power, to the scenes and companions of fall earlier life. Indeed, so naturally are many of the articles dashed off, that the reader, for the time being sire of forces that he is reading, and seems to see and feel when the suther describes.

"Every lover of a chaste and wholesome literature may read this work with pleasure and profit, and yet ro-road with quand dellight. In short, it is a book written with all the characteristic vicer and originality of the author, and displays a most sensitive perception of the beautiful, as well as an intimate knowledge of both nature and barman nature."

"It hnows much light upon an interesting and attractive cablect."

"The author has not only studied the incidents in the life of the great Apostle with much care, but he possesses the power in a high degree of appreciating the character of this preciminently gifted servent of Jesus Christ."

"An admirable book."

"Should any one ask me to name the man who of all others has been the greatest benefactor of our race, I should say without heisitation the Apostle Paul. His name is the type in human activity, the most endless and at the same time the most useful that thistory has cared to preserve. Such is the testimoury of Ado-phus Monod, the eloquent French preacher of the present day. The noble Paul, the grandest man of all men that have ever lived, has of late been the subject of unusual study.

This volume is becutifully printed and illustrated. The author has drunk deep of the springs of that piety which Paul opened for the refreshing of as Centiles."
